11 DEC 1965

Dear Mac:

The attached memorandum is a comprehensive study of the Chinese Communist economy which I believe you may find of interest.

- Resource limitations, political constraints, and the diversion of scarce resources to military programs add up to the prospect of slow growth at best for the Chinese economy in the next few years. Even so, however, China should be able in 1966, as it was in 1964-65, to move forward on such objectives as development of modern weapons and expansion of its presence in less developed countries, and the economy's ability to support actions in Vietnam and along the Indian border should continue to be strong.

Gentlemen

Sincerely,

(signed) W. F. Raborn
